

Fish on the move

Different fishes are moving into Canadian waters and familiar fishes are found in new places

PACIFIC ANCHOVY

With warm ocean conditions, this anchovy, found from California to British Columbia, is increasingly found migrating to and spawning in its Canadian range

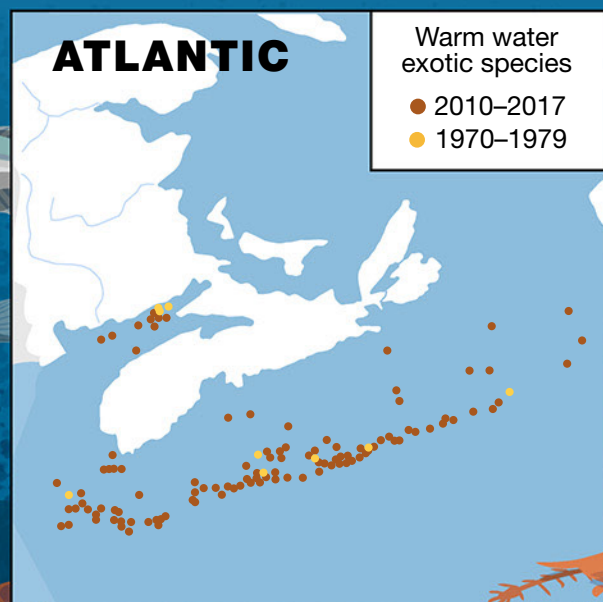

PACIFIC SALMON

At the northern end of their range, a record harvest in the thousands was taken in 2019 in the western Canadian Arctic, including some in western Nunavut

ATLANTIC SALMON

Previously few and far between in the Arctic, this species is increasingly found as far north as Pond Inlet on Baffin Island

ARMORED SEA ROBIN

One of several exotic species increasingly found along the Scotian Shelf is being captured over a broader area as bottom waters warm

SILVER HAKE

As the Atlantic Ocean warms, fishes that prefer warmer waters, such as silver hake, are found farther north and in greater abundance
